"Bearwalking" Sometimes Indicates Genius in Children, Expert Asserts

This is the first of a series of weekly articles by Lydia Gray Shaw, Associated Press Writer, bearing on the subject of child guidance.

BY LYDIA GRAY SHAW
Associated Press Writer
The first of a series of weekly articles by Lydia Gray Shaw, Associated Press Writer, bearing on the subject of child guidance. The article discusses the concept of "bearwalking" in children and how it can be a sign of genius. The author asserts that children who exhibit this behavior are often highly intelligent and creative.

Not all bearwalking children will grow up to be geniuses, but it is a sign that they are highly intelligent and creative. The article suggests that parents should encourage their children's natural abilities and provide them with the resources they need to develop their talents. The author also discusses the importance of child guidance and how it can help children to reach their full potential.

FIRST STUDENT NURSE COMPLETES TRAINING

Progress Made With Test of New Social Security Course Here

The first student nurse to complete her training at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, Miss Dorothy E. Smith, graduated today. She is the first of a class of 10 who began their training in 1932. Miss Smith, who is 23 years old, is a native of Omaha and has been a student at the university since 1931. She completed her course in nursing and social security, and will be employed by the state health department. The course in social security was a new one, and Miss Smith was the first to take it. She passed her final examination with a grade of 90 percent.
